ORNAMENTAL PLANT CARE IN FALL WILL PAY

Fall care of ornamental plants around the home will pay dividends in several ways, says Dr. R. H. Gruenhagen, plant pathologist at Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

First cleaning up dead branches and foliage will improve the general appearance of the area. But probably more important is the fact that such a cleanup will eliminate the over-wintering site of many disease or-ganisms.

If the plant material which harbors these organisms is pruned off, raked up, and burned, fewer diseases will be present to attack plants next spring.

Roses offer a good example, says Dr. Gruenhagen. In most areas the rose canes stay green all winter, so drastic pruning is not advisable. However, all dead stems should be removed and burned. The fungus that causes rose black-spot over-winters on the leaves; therefore it is important to rake and burn these leaves this fall.

This advice applies also to perennial plants such as peonies and tulips. The fungus, which causes botrytis blight of these flowers over-winters on old leaves and stems. So these should all be cut back to the ground line late in the fall. A mulch of leaves or straw will protect underground parts of the plant during the winter. Remove the mulch early in the spring to give the soil a chance, to warm up and the shoots an opportunity to emerge.
